

David Fairfield
National Grain and Feed Association
Senior Vice President of Feed Services

David Fairfield joined the National Grain and Feed Association (NGFA) staff in July 2001 after spending 20 years managing operations for major U.S. commercial feed companies. As senior vice president of feed services, he is NGFA's primary staff person that addresses feed/food safety issues.

David participates as a subject matter expert within a variety of food safety forums, including those associated with the Association of American Feed Control Officials, Global Food Safety Initiative, and the International Organization of Standardization (ISO). He also currently serves as the chair of the animal food-related activities within the Food Safety Preventive Controls Alliance, which is developing guidance and training materials to effectively implement regulations being issued under the Food Safety Modernization Act.

David is a graduate in feed science from Kansas State University's Department of Grain Science.